THEY CALLED HIM AN "OLD PILL"

THAT was years ago when he packed a terrible grouch, a sour, irascible countenance and a frown that refused to do the thing that all good livers should. No wonder his friends called him an "old pill" and stayed away.

But that was years ago—long before he discovered Beecham's Pills and learned that two at bedtime can bring sunshine into a man's life. Today, he's an optimist, a hero to his wife, and a staunch believer in Beecham's Pills.

The cheer that Beecham's Pills bring into a man's disposition, is the incomparable cheer of sound digestion, active liver, and the regular habits that make good health.

CHARTER NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that an application will be made to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, on Tuesday, January 2, 1923, by John L. Longenecker, J. Orville Hoover, G. C. Miller, and George W. Clouse of Woodbury, Pa., S. J. Rees of Six Mile Run, Pa., and Jesse Sheeder, of Wood, Pa., and others, under the Act of Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, entitled "an Act to provide for the incorporation and regulation of certain corporations" approved April 29, 1874 and supplements thereto, for the charter of an intended corporation to be called "Broad Top Coal Company" for the purpose of mining coal and manufacturing coal products and to sell and distribute the same, and for said purpose to own, purchase or lease, lands and machinery and equipment and for such purpose to have and enjoy all the rights and privileges of said Act of Assembly and its supplements.

Simon H. Sell, Solicitor,
Bedford, Pa.
Dec. 8—15—22.

One of the most successful manufacturers of automobiles tells us that "anybody can manufacture, but it takes a salesman to sell." In short, the selling end of a business is its stinger end, its business end. That is a truth which only recently the farmers of America have begun to appreciate. Before this idea broke upon them they assumed that they had done their full duty when they had learned to produce. They complain because they had to sell upon a "buyers' market," at whatever the market would pay. They thought that was due to a business conspiracy against them, and the favorite complaint was against the mysterious manipulations of "Wall street" skinning the downtrodden farmer. Now the Department of Agriculture is laying more stress upon marketing methods than upon crop production, and Secretary Wallace tells of the establishment in many States of commodity councils of farmers whose function is the gathering of market information and helping farmers to dispose of their products to advantage.

The Heart Lived In.
Faber has said, "A man's heart gets cold if he does not keep it warm by living in it." Love to others is not a matter of will or outflowing impulse. It must be purposeful and steadfast if there is to be real warmth in it. Only the heart that is alive in and used draws others close to its hearth fire.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Austin.—Picking up a supposed empty revolver here, Robert Keene killed his 13-year-old brother, Raymond, while playing "Wild West."

Bethlehem.—Reappointment of Thomas J. Lynch, of this place, as a member of the state water supply commission, was announced by Governor Sprout.

Trexlertown.—Horace Lichtenwalter, aged 56 years, a farmer of this place, was found dead in his pig stable, having expired from heart disease.

Youngwood.—Dr. A. H. Cavin, of this place, was killed instantly when the Uniontown express on the Pennsylvania railroad struck his automobile at a grade crossing.

York.—Heirs of the late Mrs. Mary A. Bell, whose will disposed of an estate of $75,000, have instituted a contest. Mrs. Bell, who left most of her money to local Catholic churches, was 85 years old when she died.

Harrisburg.—Amicable liquidation proceedings were instituted in the Dauphin county court by Insurance Commissioner Donaldson against the Independent Order of Scalls, a secret beneficial organization, with offices in Scranton, on the ground that the organization is insolvent. The commissioner was given full authority to proceed with the liquidation, as representatives of the order agreed to a decree to that effect.

Pittsburgh.—Frank R. N. Cunningham, former cashier of the Broad Top National Bank at Hopewell, Bedford county, pleaded guilty to misappropriation of $40,974.01 and was sentenced in federal court here to serve eight months in the county jail. A statement was made to the court that some of this amount had been returned to the bank.

Harrisburg.—Philadelphia led all counties in gasoline tax for October sales, its payments to the state treasury being $80,759.33, while Allegheny was next with $27,214.64. Berks paid $7,731.24; Erie, $5,074.86; Luzerne, $8,157.97; Montgomery, $7,726.11; Lancaster, $4,497.80, and Westmoreland, $6,291.60, and York, $5,470.84.

Harrisburg.—Premium rates on compensation insurance will be cut on an average of 10 per cent again, according to officials of the state insurance department, who have completed the annual review of rates. The new rates will apply to all compensation policies on January 1. The rates have been cut 10 per cent almost every year from the start of compensation, the continued reduction being based on experience and the systematic efforts in industry for prevention of accidents. It is estimated $15,000,000 of annual premiums for compensation insurance are affected by these rates, which differ according to the cost of work accidents in the separate industries. A few classes have been increased. Pennsylvania experience is used exclusively in the calculations, a simple system of classification is employed and recent experience noted. The average rate per $100 of payroll has been: 1919, $1.01; 1920, $1.02; 1921, 73c; 1922, 67c, estimated, and 1923, 67c, estimated.

Pottsville.—Judge Koch was given 281 appeals of coal companies from the tax assessment of this county, which boosted the total valuation of the companies $500,000,000. The coal companies have declared they will file the biggest series of lawsuits in the history of the county and this action indicates they are making good their contention that the coal of this county, the Thompson case, against the county for neglect, months and years. Koch said he did not know when the court will get through hearing 281 cases, as all must be heard separately. They bid fair to rival the hundreds of suits for damages from coal washing along streams, which clogged the courts for years.

Harrisburg.—State forestry authorities have notified district foresters to be ready to assist timberland owners in selection of trees to be cut for Christmas. The department says an eight-foot tree is just starting to grow, and if permitted to stand, soon would grow into a merchantable timber tree.

Uniontown.—District Attorney Miller, of Fayette county, launched an injunction drive against violators of the Womer law by beginning injunctive proceedings against a brewery and five restaurants. Four of the restaurants were closed immediately, and he said the other restaurant and the brewery would be shut down. The court order directed the defendants to show cause why their places of business should not be closed because of alleged violation of the Womer act. A state policeman, who confiscated beer from the brewery, said the manager of the plant offered him $100 if he permitted substitution of near-beer for the beverage seized.

McKeesport.—William Howser died in a hospital here from burns received in a powder explosion November 23, when two other miners were killed.

Erie.—The Model Bakery has taken bankruptcy proceedings with $13,424 assets and only $9868 liabilities.

New Derry.—Mrs. Irene Henderson, postmaster here, is under $2000 bail because $9636 is said to have disappeared from her office.

Lauriatown.—Inmates at the Lauriatown almshouse enjoyed a dance through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gangwer, steward and matron.

Uniontown.—All records for fall commitments for one month at the Fayette county jail were broken during November. The total was more than 400 for the men's department alone. More than the usual number also was admitted to the women's and boys' department. The record for the men's department up until last month was 334. On one day this week there were 55 men committed. Conditions in the county jail are such that the prison soon will have to put out the S. I. O. sign.

Uniontown.—On their way from Uniontown to their headquarters in New Salem, members of the state police noted a rather suspicious looking automobile and stopped it. A search revealed a dozen bottles of beer and a quart of wine in the car. Five deputy sheriffs, giving their names as William Fleming, John Tracey, Peter C. Berry, George Sanders and George Moore, were arrested and committed to the Fayette county jail to await a hearing.

Harrisburg.—An abutting property owner cannot remove coal or any other material from under an adjacent to an established highway in such a manner as to cause the surface of the road to sink or be otherwise injured, because the highway is entitled to support that it will keep it in place both lateral and vertical. If the removal of the coal at the surface or under the road will destroy the highway it may not be done. This ruling has been given to Township Commissioner Joseph W. Hunter by Deputy Attorney General J. W. Brown in the case of a road in Susquehanna township, Cambria county, and the supervisors of the township are advised to apply for an injunction requiring the road to be restored. Brown in giving a number of citations says the coal cannot be removed so as to disturb the surface because the owner's right to do so is subordinate to the right of the public to use the highway. The encroachment is illegal and an invasion of public rights.

Lewistown.—Henry High, 91 years old, said to be the oldest member of the Independent Order of Red Men in the state, was the guest of Onapatonga Tribe at a banquet given in his honor. He was initiated at Bellefonte in 1858, and is a close contestant for honors with Joseph A. Fichtorn, of this place. High became the ward of the local tribe when his wife died several years ago, and a year ago was sent to the Cheltenham Home for Aged Red Men. He returned here for the event without escort and was able to tramp about the scenes of his boyhood.

Harrisburg.—Auditor General Lew is announced that with $1,250,000 in state taxes paid by the Pennsylvania railroad and $220,000 from other sources receipts for the general fund of the state exceeded the $55,000,000 mark, establishing a new record.

Erie.—Henry Ford arrived from Detroit to visit the General Electric plant here with a view to the electrification of the Toledo, Detroit and Trenton railway. He was guest at luncheon at the plant and inspected the huge locomotive built there.

Sanbury.—A coroner's jury decided Grant L. Kline, a Northumberland paper hanger, who was found dead in Frank Starr's hotel here, died of alcoholism. A report on an analysis made of the man's stomach at the Geisinger Hospital was to the effect that synthetic gin was found in it. There was no evidence that the man had obtained the gin in Starr's place, and George H. Deppen, the bartender, said he had given him nothing stronger than near beer.

Harrisburg.—Expense of keeping after violators of the Volstead act has caused Steelton council to seriously consider an ordinance fining persons caught operating stills $100. As the law now operates, the borough police force does a lot of work ferreting out stills in the county.

Harrisburg.—Predictions that by 1923 there will be enough trained teachers to meet the new Pennsylvania standard for teachers are made by the department of public instruction in announcing that 7500 students are enrolled in teaching courses in the normal schools, an increase of 2000, the statement says. "In view of the fact that only graduates of four-year high schools or students with an equivalent training have been admitted to Pennsylvania normal schools the past two years, while in 1919 many students were enrolled for academic work and special courses this increase in attendance is very remarkable. A further evidence of how interest in higher education has been stimulated during the past few years is found in the enrollment at the 47 colleges and universities in the state which carry educational courses. The total number of students now registered at these institutions is 53,500, an increase of 7500 over the figures for 1919.

Pittsburgh.—A coroner's jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide in the case of Mrs. Antonia Postucha. The woman said she killed her husband after he had threatened her. They had been living apart for several months.

Connellsville.—While taking off his coat in his boarding house, C. W. Fairchild, aged 74, employed at a mine here, was stricken with heart disease and died.

Altoona.—To avoid drives for funds the Lions' Altoona Club has suggested a community chest.

Drums.—Federal enforcement officers raided the barroom of Frank Houser here and seized seventy gallons of wine and some whisky.

Huntingdon.—Louis R. Leister sold the Leister House here to J. G. Stewart and David H. Hagan, of Tyrone, for $80,000.

JEWEL'S ANSWER

By MILDRED WHITE

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

Stephen Hempstead looked up with his incredulous smile.

"Pardon me, Don," he said, "but I must ask to be excused from the party. I have no doubt that the young woman in question is as admirable as you say. Still, I prefer the solitude of my bachelor apartment tonight."

Donald Kenzie impatiently shifted his position.

"You will not be excused, old hemmit," he returned determinedly. "We must get you out of your selfish ways. Admitted that most women disappoint and bore you, Julianna will be as refreshingly companionable as a fellow-man."

"Julianna!" exclaimed the distinguished appearing man in the wicker chair, "the name is fanciful enough anyway."

"Jewel, we call her," Donald seriously amended, "and if ever name fitted woman that name is Jewel's. Above rubles—Isn't that supposed to be the price of a good wife?"

"Julianna, as I understand it, is not a wife," objected Stephen.

"With your appreciation of her character, she should at least have had the offer of your hand," he spoke sarcastically, but Donald's face was still grave.

"She had the offer," he said, "and refused it."

Jewel was not disappointing in appearance, at least. Stephen sank down resignedly on the cushions of the divan at her side. Also, she was entertaining. She could listen, he found, most comfortably. It was long since anyone had been genuinely interested in his achievements. Stephen found himself unburdening the problems and ambitions of years. Suddenly he sat up abashed.

"I must have bored you," he said. But Jewel was not bored. In turn she gave to him with a little humorous turn of her own the simple details of her days. He could see through her eyes—and wide blue eyes they were—the dignified old house that stood on the town square where it had stood through two generations. It could see, too, the frail woman who was Jewel's mother, dependent on the girl's care. He could read between the lines of humorous telling of small sacrifices—that revealed clever management.

"Of course," Jewel finished, in her contented tone, "we might have more pleasures to enjoy than our very simple ones—if it were possible for me to leave mother long enough to go out into the world to earn money. It is kind of Donald's mother to invite me to the city occasionally—my visits are brief but restoring," Jewel smiled.

Stephen offered to drive the guest back to her home the following day in his big comfortable car. It was quite a concession for Stephen, but Donald did not seem surprised. Neither was he surprised when his friend formed a habit of driving out frequently to call upon Jewel at her home.

"The companionship will do them both good," he told his mother.

Stephen some time later confided to Donald that love at last had found him. "One must love Jewel," he remarked in that tone of gentle gravity. "What is the verse? 'To know her, is to love her.'"

"What will you do, my friend, if she returns your interest? It would be impossible for Jewel to leave her frail mother."

"We have a branch office in Jewel's home town," he replied. "I could be transferred there."

Donald grasped his friend's hand. "You mean you will leave the city and go to live with her mother?"

"When will you put the question to Jewel?" he asked.

"Tomorrow," Stephen said. "I'll call in tomorrow evening and give you the verdict, laddie."

Jewel stood beside the old white marble mantle when Stephen called.

"I come to ask you to settle the question of my life's comfort and happiness," Stephen said. He told her of his possible plan—how she might still, as his wife, remain at her mother's side; how the home town office might be his. As he talked he knew that his love was returned. Jewel's blue eyes seemed to listen her whole silent pose waited his every word. When he had finished and his hands reached out, questioning, Jewel arose and went to stand again before the wilderness of the old mantle.

"Stephen," she said tentatively, "it must be that you do not understand; else you would know that I—oh! how could you ask it—that I might not try to build up my happiness—our happiness upon young John Dale's disappointment and discouragement. He has worked to that position worthily. He and his wife are enjoying now his well-earned success. I cannot marry you, Stephen Hempstead," Jewel said.

That evening Donald waited in his smoking room. He knew what answer Jewel would have for his friend and he was regretful for Stephen. But when Stephen came a sort of radiance seemed to envelope his features. "It is all right, laddie," Stephen said. "Jewel did not disappoint. She is your true woman. I had to find out. And she forgives my subterfuge. After all it will not be so far to motor back and forth each day from the city."

REV. EYLER CELEBRATES FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY AS PASTOR OF ST. JOHN'S REFORMED CHURCH

The old saying that "time flies" was brought home to the members of St. John's Reformed Church at Bedford on last Sunday when it was recalled that their beloved pastor, Rev. J. Albert Eyler, had served them for fifteen years, a period longer than that of any other pastor since Dr. Ellis N. Kremer was pastor here.

These have been very prosperous years for the congregation in things both material and spiritual. They have been years in which Rev. Eyler had always unselfishly and willingly devoted himself not only to the work of his own denomination, but in aiding anything that stood for the moral uplift or for the betterment of the community, and in everything worth while for both town and community and in doing this he gained, also, the love of those of the community outside of his own congregation.

While time flies in the passing of days and years, yet deeds done and things worth while that have been accomplished remain to bless or to condemn, and what a joy it is to look back and see the noble accomplishment of love and of one's best effort over a period of fifteen years.

On last Sunday morning, in a message which Rev. Eyler brought to his people and at which time he had an unusually large audience of his own people, he used, as his text the text which he used the very first sermon that he ever preached to the people of St. John's fifteen years ago.

"For We Are Laborers Together With God." He reviewed many of the things accomplished during that time, telling his people that those fifteen years represented the best in his life and that fifteen years from the life of anyone represented considerable more than anyone could think of. These represented the best of his strength and heart and mind.

And in looking back over those fifteen years he said that there were a great many things that he did not want ever to forget, above all the one thing was the love of his people for him during that time and that he was so thankful that during those fifteen years he was privileged to labor not as an individual, but together with the people of St. John's.

In the development of character and the helping to bring to pass the Kingdom of God on earth. As a result of the labors of those fifteen years, he went ahead and gave information, calling attention to the fact that when he first came to Bedford, St. John's Reformed Church had 223 members; and at the present time we have 339. At that time we had a possible hundred enrolled in the Sunday school, while at the present time there are 359. Then came the benevolence amounted to $243 a year, while last year the same amounted to $2,918 with over $7,000 the year previous. He told that over that period 410 members had been received into the church by him; that there had been a loss of 239; also that during that time, over $61,000 had been contributed to the work of St. John's church and that a significant part of that statement was that during the last three years considerably more had been given than all of the twelve previous to that. He told, also, that he had 227 baptisms and 188 marriages and that 223 times he was called to stand by the open grave. Calling attention also to the fact that, when he first came here, $60.00 at Christmas Time as an offering for the orphans was considered enormous, but that during recent years our offering had been running more than $300 for this cause. Our church apportionment at that time was $250 a year and that there was very considerable trouble in raising this money, often finding it necessary to go to the bank and borrow and to secure funds through outside means, while at the present time the apportionment ran four times that much and it was always paid before the end of the year.

The pastor's salary at the present time is more than double what it was when he came here and in addition to that, that St. John's was supporting another pastor in the person of Arthur D. Smith, a missionary to Japan and had, also, fully subscribed her quota of more than $12,000 to the Forward Movement and in the meantime from year to year had been improving, beautifying and enlarging both church property and parsonage here a home.

In closing his sermon he said that in looking back everything, of course was not perfect. There were thorns, there was hard things to bear, yet "I thank God," said he, for these fifteen years and for the privilege of pouring it out with you and in looking into the future, I press forward for there is work to be done, the goal has not yet been reached and The Kingdom of God is not yet come and God's Kingdom will come only as to the faithfulness with which we keep our vows to him. How many years God will want me to be a laborer with you, I do not know, but until that time comes, I am going to stand here and preach this dear, old gospel of God just as I have done in the past.
